Acknowledgements

Firstly, ‘thank you’ to my family for all of their love and support while I completed this book – Encarna, Damian, Soraya, Jenna, Tevian, Lachlan, Arion and Nolan. I also want to thank my sister QT for caring for our mother which gives me the space to do the work.

I want to thank the students in my 2019 course in the Swedish School of Social Science at the University of Helsinki for sharing their knowledge on sambo within their contexts. This gave me the impetus I needed to feel that my ideas on sambo as global were ok.

I want to thank Macarena González Ulloa for sharing her photo-text on colonialism in Hamburg with me. This encouraged me to look at Germany’s involvement in the slave trade and white settler colonialism. My thanks also go to Beverley Lemire for the coffee in Edmonton and the tip that I should look at Sweden’s role in enslavement and writing on marble sculptures and racism.

Many thanks to the librarians in the West India Reading Room, Alma Jordan Library, The University of the West Indies, St. Augustine Campus, Trinidad and Tobago, for their help with the archival work on sambo on Caribbean slave plantations. I would also like to thank the archivists in ‘El Archivo de Indias’ in Seville, Spain, for their patience and help in tracking zambo in the Spanish colonial archives. My thanks also go to the library at Nova Southeastern University, Florida, that gave me access for archival work and to Andrea Shaw for enabling this access. My thanks to my graduate research assistant, Manzah-Kyentoh Yankee, for doing the research on blackface in Canada.

My thanks to the Carnegie School of Education, Leeds Beckett University, UK, for funding some of my archival work. I really do appreciate this, as without it the book would not have emerged. Thank you to my colleague Heather Paul, who encouraged me to finish the book when she told me that her constant response to anti-Black racism over the years had to be that she was ‘not that little boy in the blue shorts and red shirt with the green umbrella!’

Finally, my thanks to the Canada Research Chair Programme for the funding that made this 2nd edition possible.
